My Summer Story

By: Tara Elsa

This summer was very unique. I would usually hang out with my friends and go to fun camps, but none of that was really possible this summer, at least not in the same way as past years. Right when school ended, there was a period of time where I felt sad and quite useless. Everything changed quickly. When I found just a little bit of motivation, I'd go outside and run. I would normally see my friends every day, but then it wasn't possible. I spent a lot of time in our sunroom and would look out the window at the empty park. We would normally go out for dinner, but we had to instead eat at home everyday. It was such a weird feeling; because although my entire family (mom, dad, grandma, grandpa, and my cat) was with me, I felt very alone. I wanted to capture that feeling in a series of photos. Each photo represents a part of the things that changed for me when quarantine started and when school ended: running (when I found motivation), feeling alone, spending a lot of time in my sunroom, protesting at the Black Lives Matter events, and eating at home for every meal.

A landscape photograph showing a sunset over a mountain range. In the foreground, a dead, gnarled tree stands on a rocky outcrop. The middle ground is filled with a dense forest of evergreen trees. The background shows rolling hills and mountains under a sky with soft, orange and yellow clouds. The sun is visible as a bright spot on the horizon.
